From: Violeta Kircheva, Managing Partner, and Krasimir Terziev, Managing Partner, and
Bozhidar Kirchev, Managing Partner

"Marvil CG LLC dba Orbital Connect is committed to export compliance with all export controls in the Export Administration Act and the Export Administration Regulations and has allocated appropriate resources to ensure that the products, technology, and services distributed by the company comply with all U.S. export regulations and laws.

We understand the importance of export controls in protecting national security and foreign policy interests for the United States. Marvil CG LLC and its employees will not make any sale that violates or potentially violates U.S. export regulations and laws under any circumstances. For our company is essential that our employees are familiar with and comply with export controls to prevent noncompliance scenarios that could potentially jeopardize national security or further the development of weapons of mass destruction, nuclear proliferation, missile technology, and chemical and biological weapons.

The risk of unauthorized transfers of low-level technology and the possible penalties for non-compliance, could result in loss of export privileges, disciplinary action, damage to our reputation, criminal penalties, and administrative/civil penalties.

Our Export Compliance Manager is available for any export compliance questions, including potential violations, updates to the manual or statement, and procedural export uncertainties."

Export controls are laws and regulations that limit the export of certain items, including technology and goods, to specific countries or individuals. The basic purpose of export controls is to protect national security and foreign policy interests for the United States by preventing sensitive technology and goods from falling into the wrong hands, such as terrorists or countries that pose a threat to the United States. Compliance with export controls is crucial to prevent unauthorized transfers of sensitive technology and goods that could be used for any harmful purposes.

Export compliance is an important aspect of our corporate culture and is the responsibility of all Marvil CG's personnel. Formal training will be provided for all employees on a regular and ongoing basis and will be tailored to fit specific departmental requirements and individual responsibilities.
